QUEER DEEP SEA FISHES.

CREATURES WITH LANTERNS AT THE BOTTOM OF THE OCEAN. Prof. Goode on the Mysteries of Mid-

Ocean Still Hidden from Man People Who See the Sea Serpent Great Diffi-culties in the Way of Studying the Deep, WASHINGTON, Aug. 8. Dr. G. Brown Goode. Secretary of the National Museum of the Smithsonian Institution, and Prof. Tarleton H. Pean the oceanic ichthrology. They have finally produced a work on oceanic fishes of the deep ea class which is probably the most complete and carefully prepared paper of the kind ever The preracation of the plates required much skill. It was all done by the Government Print-ing office, and some of the advanced proofs are sate actory evidence that the Governme Printing Office can turn out work which is a widit not only to the Government, but also to

SCHIOSTOMA BARBATUM AND LINOPHRYMS

American edientific illustration. The work is a Changalone in its nature, but so many remarkably interesting specimens are pictured and described that it contains a great measure of popular interest.

Fifty years ago it was not believed by scientiets that danes outlet exist in the great orean depths. The hydrostatic pressure was believed to be so great that few specimens, if any, could exist below the thousand-foot level. Occasionally strange fishes would be found floating on the surface of the accent and turned over to scientife men, but they were always dead, or dying. and were not believed to have come from great depths. The study of oceanic tenthyo.ogy, Dr. Goode says, is still in its infancy. New specimens of genera are obtained every time the are conseed to the bottom in an untried spot. The appliances for the capture of Sah, especially those which are believed to live suspended in the middle strata of midean, are impurfect, and the likelihood is great that there are many forms so organized that they cannot well be taken by simple, slow-mov-It is therefore sufe to believe that as large to be taken in this way. He thinks that below the surface, there are living certain fishlike animals unknown to science and of great and being seen by passing vensels, or even from beashore resorts, give foundation to the scawhich not infrequently are the bases of attrac-tions set forth by the wily hotel keeper.

To appreciate the meagre knowledge of what saming on in mid-ocean it is only necessary to heation such a fish as the Chiasmodon. It is "CAMMEYER!

one of those grotesque pelagic fishes with yawning, finishe jaws and a vastly distensible stomacu, which is able to gorge other fishes equal or more than equal to itself in size. This practice is attended, naturally, by disaster, and the Chiasmodu, in the event of death, is brought to the surface by the expansion of the gases in its tissues. Such accidents evicently naupen very often. But the chances are few nevertheless, that wars of this kind should fall into the hands of naturalists, and within forly years a Chiasmodon has been seen only five times. This fish, although known to be abundant, has only once been taken by the deep sea nets. There is a specimen of Chiasmodon in the collection at the National Museum which swallowed a fish litree times as doig as fiself.

Howe in the basement of the Smithsonian building is the collection of fishes which has been made by the officers of the institution. It is the largest and most complete in the world. Arranged on shelves of varying heights and depths are butles of various sizes, from four inches in length to as many feet, in which the specimens are placed. When a fish is sent to the Smithsonian institution. When a fish is sent to the Smithsonian institution, and placed in one of these viaes fars, which are filled with alcohol. The alrohol remains clear and transparent and the fish are seen as well as if taken in hand. None of the general visitures to the institution are allowed by visit this sanctuary of science; only those persons who are interested in this valuable work are permitted to enter there. So wonderful are many of the forms of these queer from our ideas of what fish should look like, that it seems as if they might have been transported to our occans from another planet. The headless monaters of early history are surpaised. The elaborate dragons of childhood are excelled in hide-ousness. More than anything else will this collection lead the case all visitor to believe in a realm of surpassing wonder, as yet only partially discovered. the side of the United States Fish Commission steamer Speed well, the trawlinet was cast in 160 fathoms of water. The writers were both standing by the mouth of the net, when as the saliors lifted the end of the bag, two strange forms fell out on the deck. A single glance was enough to tell the authors that these were new to our fauna and probably unknown to science. At that time they seemed like visitors from another world, and none of the strange forms which lave since passed through the Government laboratory has brought haif as much interest and enthusiasm. These first has were Macrurus labratil and Lyodes Verrilli. They were similardli and Lyodes Verrilli. They were similardli and have since been found to be very abundant on the Commental slope; but they were among the first fruits of that great harvest in the field of occanio lethilyology which has been garnered in the hadeen years that have passed since that time. Only about thirty specimens had previously been found, and the expedition of the Britley had before were the side of the United States Fish Commission has been garrered in the nasteen years that have passed since that time. Only about thirty specimens had previously been found, and the expedition of the British ship Challenger, which left England in 1873 and returned in 1875, had as yet not given to the public the results of the discoveries male by the naturalists on board. In 1876 the headquarters of the Fish Commission were at Gloucester, and there were received a number of deep-sea forms taken by the Cape Ann Ishermen on the off-shore banks. In 1886 the Fish Commission tegan its explorations of the Gulf stream of the south coast of New England, in 1881 the authors undertook, at the request of Prof. Haird and Mr. Agassiz, to produce a work upon the fishes of the Coast Survey and the Fish Commission together. It was not until 1801, however, that they were able to complete their studies, the liness and death of Prof. flaird having interrupted the work. In its present form it stands as a compendium and summary of existing knowledge in regard to oceanic interpology.

form it stands as a compendium and summary of existing knowledge in regard to oceanic lanchyology.

One of the great difficulties in obtaining the collections for the Smithsoulan has been the fact the fish handed up from the great depths of the ocean in running nets were subjected to severe handling and in some cases were so injured as to be practically valueless for scientific purposes. In the case of the fish of the deep sea, where fish have a pressure upon their body of about three tons for every square inch, it is surprising that they reach the surface without hursting. The gases in their bodies, which are continually operating against the hydrostatic pressure, so inflate them that by the time they reach the surface they are frequently distended to more than their natural size and their internal mechanism is disorganized. One of the qualities which most of these decu-see fishus have is that of imminestry. Below a depth of comparatively few fathoms the sea bed is commistely dark, and in the fish inhabiting these waters there is usually some organ for light producing. This is usually in some form of phosphorus, which is discharged from a gland with mucus. These giands are sometimes arranged along the sides of the head and sometimes which is discharged from a pland with mucus. These grands are sometimes arranged along the sides of the head and sometimes cover a large part of the body. Two forms of fish, the Echiostoma Baroatum and Linophryne Lucfer, have a glowing buth at the end of an appendage attached to the law. One form of fish, the examinhthys, has a spine tipped with a cluster of flaments which are illuminated by phosphorus. These lights are possibly for the purpose of attracting food, or for deface. twenty-four feerin length, which is occasionally arranded on the short in stormy seasons. With in the past 150 years specimens have been found on the shores of Norway. Finance, the Farce Islands, Scotland, Feland, England, the Mediterraneau, France, Bermuda, the Cape of Good Hope, Hindystan, and New Zealand. Dr. Conther gives a list of forty-four seen by naturalists, and these, of course, are only an inagnificant proportion of those which have actually been stranded. The world-wide distribution and the number of waifs give syldence that the fish is abundant in mid-occasional and yet the exploring ships in all the rears of their committeel searching have found no vestigate of it old or young. Dr. toside says that many similar cases would be direct, and he desires to call attention to the great necessity for further employation of the depths of the cream of which as yet, in spite of what has been done, we know little. defence. It is the intention of Dr. Goode to prepare a more aspular work for distribution, with a general description, as far as is a known, of the habits and origin of deep-sea fahes.

Bad for the Iceman. call attention to the great necessary to which are therefore safe to believe that as there are no properties and the depths of the case of which are the properties of the depths of the case of the depths of the case of which are the properties of the depths of the depths of the case of the depths of the case of the depths and the case of the middle depths, and those of the middle depths, and those of the surface stratable of mid-ocean, are many inhabitants of the case of the middle depths, and those of the surface stratable of mid-ocean, are many pounds of ice every day, whether there was anything in it to be kept or not yet absolutely flasd. Such are the imperfections in the methods of traveling and dredging that the naturalist, when he has sorted out the flates from his nets after a haul in mid-ocean, are sampled surface and of course, the more lee that metted in them the more is there was to be bought, and, as far as we were concerned, the masses of the mid-ocean of Mr. Agassiz in the Pacific, with the Tanner nat, and of course, the more lee that metred in them the more is there was to be bought, and, as far as we were concerned, the masses to show prestry conclusively that there are but few living forms below a depth of 1,800 or sampled are heard every year and which not infrequently are the bases of attractions and the section of the case of the mid-ocean are not yet absolutely flast. Such are the imperfectional in the surface and of course, the improvement of the methods of traveling and redging and redging and of course, whether there was anything in it to be kept or not. CARNEGIE HALL CAT'S SARDINES.

Left Alone with Six Open Soxes White
His Owners Went Away for a Week.
"My cat's lot is not a happy one," said the occupant of a studio in Carnegie Hall. "We live in the ninth story of the annex, and his only playground is the roof of the main building, to which no other cat obtains access as it is 100 feet high. He has not set his foot on the ground for more than a year, and his only companions are my wife and myself."

"We were heartless enough to leave him entirely alone for a whole week recently while we went on an outing. Before going away we opened haif a dozen boxes of sardines and put them within his reach. Then we turned on one of the bathub faucets a little, so as to provide so he could get out on the roof. We knew he wouldn't eat the aardines all the will my the wall at a time, and we left him with obit much misgrying.

This result justified our expectations. It was a glad cat that met us on our return but to a hungry one showing that he had saten the sardines, which had disappeared gradually, the may, of course, have added to his larder by the opportune catch of a mouse. He did no mischief while we were away, and the various rooms to which he had access were in as good order as we left them."
